The 31-metre- high keep, or watch tower, stands proudly above the rest of the castle. Most probably built in the 11th century, it was heightened in the mid-13th century. The original entrance is 8 metres from the ground and was reached by means of a ladder or the drawbridge. The keep was the last refuge in case the castle was besieged, as well as an observation post for defence. It was also used as a storage area and a prison. The view of the castle, the lake and the mountains seen from the top should not be missed! The same is true for St. George's Chapel built at the beginning of the 13th century, with its murals representing Christ and figures from the Old and New Testaments.

A 3D perspective diagram of a borehole. The borehole wall is depicted as a brown, textured cylinder. A central probe, consisting of a blue cylindrical section and a silver cylindrical section, extends downwards from the top of the borehole. Two smaller, thin silver cylindrical sensors extend horizontally from the right side of the borehole wall at different depths. The background is a plain light beige.

A 3D architectural rendering of a medieval-style building complex. The main building features a dark stone facade with a large wooden double door highlighted by a yellow frame. A wooden balcony with a white railing is visible above the door. To the left, a smaller building with a tiled roof and a wooden extension is shown. A red rectangular box contains the number '44'. The scene is set outdoors with a paved ground and some foliage in the background.
